NEW YORKERS are about to begin a new era of speech, according to English scholars, who have recently made a study of the language of our time.

The term "boob" is now used in referring to women, and the term "fathead" is used in referring to men. These words are derived from the names of two popular comic strips, "Boob" and "Fathead," which are published weekly.

A localization of jargon, some words are used in a certain location, while others may be used in another, as in the case of "Fogey." This word, which means a person who is old-fashioned, is used in New England, while in the West it means a person who is poor.

Local words are also used in referring to persons, as in the case of "Dopey," which means a person who is stupid, and "American," which means a person who is not American.

For instance, a man from Canada is called a "Dopey," while a man from the United States is called an "American." This is because the man from Canada is not used to the ways of the United States, while the man from the United States is used to the ways of Canada.

Another example is the word "Kanuck," which means a person who is not used to the ways of the United States, while the man from the United States is called a "Kanuck."

There are hundreds of other words, too.
